Introduction

The level of legal culture of a person is of great importance in improving and ensuring the stability of social relations in society. Because any sphere of society has its own legal and regulatory foundations, which are reflected in the Constitution, Laws and the most important legal documents. Therefore, citizens constantly strive to have all the legal norms existing in our country, as well as relevant legal information in their sphere. Citizens' deep knowledge of the legal foundations of their sphere is of great importance for the development of the systems and structures in which they work.

The Development Strategy of New Uzbekistan sets out the goal of developing democratic legal traditions in society, ensuring the rule of law, and improving the legal culture of citizens. "Increasing the legal culture and legal awareness of the population, establishing effective interaction between government agencies and civil society institutions, mass media and educational organizations in this area.

Launch of the Legal Tech platform, which provides the opportunity to prepare legal documents without the participation of a lawyer for entrepreneurs and citizens, especially low-income groups of the population" [1] purpose is indicated.

Research methodology

Thus, in modern society, the development of legal culture of citizens is becoming an important and priority direction in society, which has been determined to serve social and spiritual upliftment. At the same time, new approaches are being introduced to increase the legal culture and social activity of our citizens. In applying these approaches to social practice, the importance of measures aimed at improving the legal culture in the system of social and spiritual interests of the population is becoming significant.

Spiritual and educational centers and legal institutions are actively participating in the implementation of these measures. At the same time, a research institute has been established to analyze legal policy, which will take a worthy part in measures related to improving the legal culture of the population. The wider provision of legal culture to citizens and its full manifestation in the socio-spiritual life of citizens is associated with the importance of programmatic work carried out in this regard.

Analysis and results

A large number of legal norms have been adopted in society to increase the level of legal culture of the population. The state of awareness and full compliance of a person with these legal norms is also a form of legal culture.

By Professor Kh.T. Odilkariev “Legal culture refers to the level of education of the legal system established in society, the level of awareness of the people about this legal system, citizens' respect for the law, the implementation of legal norms, intolerance towards those who do not comply with the law, and the level of obedience to the law” [2;56-57], described it as such and revealed its important aspects.

Increasing legal culture should first of all begin in childhood. At the same time, it is advisable to increase the influence of the family, neighborhood and community as a progressive force. In the process of increasing legal culture, it is important to make significant use of social and legal advertisements and videos, and to use sufficiently informative promotional products. That is, “The social activities of young people depend largely on the perception of the information they receive and the ability to interact with other people” [3;157].

The content of legal culture is similar both in the whole world, in individual countries, and in our national conditions. That is, one of the most important aspects of legal culture is unconditional obedience to laws in practical activities, constant submission to them, full compliance with them, and conducting one's social and legal activities on their basis. The need for citizens to fully realize the importance of laws in social life in their worldview and to constantly master the culture of acting on them as an important value in life practice is determined by the content and essence of legal culture.

Research expresses the following opinion on this; “Legal culture is a form of social and legal life, it embodies multifaceted legal relations and legal relations, it is expressed in the implementation of legal practice and describes legal documents, specific features and level of legal development. A certain society, the cultural attitude of subjects to the law, public and individual recognition of legal principles and ideals” [4;127].

A high level of legal culture also has a positive impact on the professional ethics of an employee working in any office or organization. Also, in the workplace, that is, in offices, enterprises and institutions, employees demonstrating their legal culture at a high level has a positive impact, first of all, on the development of that enterprise, and through it, society. Because any employee with a high level of legal knowledge understands the interests of society well and participates in social relations with his legal literacy and potential.

As noted by the famous philosopher in our country, Professor A. Saitkasimov; “One of the most important aspects of legal culture is unconditional obedience to laws in practical activities, submission to them, full compliance with them, and constant activity based on them. It is also extremely important for a person to consistently and fully realize the importance of laws in social life in his consciousness and worldview, and to apply them in practical life” [5;52].

Conclusion

In today's modern conditions, the characteristics, criteria and functions of legal culture are undergoing a slight change. Today, legal relations in social life are also undergoing changes in the conditions of radical reform of all spheres of society. The actions and aspirations of the population are increasing in terms of acquiring the culture of knowing and following legal norms. Because every citizen who knows his right and wants to show it in practice will have his proper place in social relations.
